Located southwest of Tokyo, Mt. Fuji is Japan's tallest peak at 3,776 meters. It is one of Japan's most well-known national symbols, and also considered to be a sacred place of worship. The beauty of its famous snow-capped peak attracts countless travelers from around the world.

Japan has long wished for Mt. Fuji to be registered as a natural World Heritage site, due to its stunning landscape as well as its cultural and religious prominence. Thanks to the efforts of the Japanese government, on 22 June 2013 Mt. Fuji was officially named a cultural World Heritage site. It is Japan's 17th site to make the World Heritage list.
